Let's Talk About Cyberbullying and What You Can Do

Submitted by the Shiawassee Prevention Network

What is Cyberbullying?

Cyberbullying is bullying that takes place using electronic technology. Electronic technology includes devices and equipment such as cell phones, computers and tablets as well as communication tools including social media sites, text messages, chat and websites. Examples of cyberbullying include mean text messages or emails, rumors sent by email, texts or chat that are placed on social networking sites, and embarrassing pictures, videos, websites or face profiles.

Youth who are being cyberbullied are often bullied in person as well. Additionally, youth who are cyberbullied have a harder time getting away from the behavior. Cyberbullying can happen 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and reach a young person even when he or she is alone. It can happen any time of the day or night. Cyberbullying messages and images can be posted anonymously and distributed quickly to a very wide audience. It can be difficult and sometimes impossible to trace the source. Deleting inappropriate or harassing messages, texts and pictures is extremely difficult after they have been posted or sent.

Effects of Cyberbullying

Cell phones and computers themselves are not to blame for cyberbullying. Social media sites can be used for positive activities, like connecting youth with friends and family, helping students with school and for entertainment. But these tools can also be used to hurt other people. Whether done in person or through technology, the effects of bullying are similar.

Signs of Cyberbullied

Look for changes in the youths' behavior. However, be aware that not all youth who are cyberbullied exhibit warning signs. Some signs that may point to a cyberbullying problem are:

- Using their device significantly more
- Acting overly emotional after using a device
- Deleting their social media accounts
- Becoming nervous, anxious or irritable when receiving a text
- · Doesn't want to see friends as much as usual
- Doesn't want to participate in usual sports or extracurricular activities
- Avoids group gatherings
- Showing drastic changes in their mood
- Refuses to go to school; doesn't want to leave the house
- Starts getting lower grades than usual
- Having difficulty sleeping
- Talking about self-harm
- Losing interest in hobbies

Identifying the warning signs of cyberbullying can be difficult. Youth often hide their devices or avoid talking about what they are going through out of fear that the bullying will get worse.

Bullying is a Big Deal

Every seven minutes, a student is bullied in the United States. Many students report incidents of bullying as a problem in their school. According to the 2022 OK2SAY Annual Report, there were 7,415 total tips received. 1,344 Of those tips were about bullying and 465 tips specific to cyberbullying.

A recent Youth Risk Behavior Surveillance Survey finds that many high school students (grades 9-12) were electronically bullied in the past year. Research on cyberbullying is growing. However, because youths' technology use changes rapidly, it is difficult to design surveys that accurately capture trends.

Are There Ways to Stop Cyberbullying?

Yes, there are many ways that you can prevent or stop cyberbullying:

Block or delete the person doing the cyberbullying.

There are many resources around Shiawassee County for area youth (17 and under). These resources, such as mental health, food pantries, drug and alcohol classes, counseling and many more are available from different service organizations throughout the county. Many of these concerns are not just a once and awhile occurrence, some individuals and families battle with many issues around the clock and daily. This Emerging Needs section will highlight some of the various resources. Please watch for the November 12th edition of The Independent with some follow-up stories and results from some local surveys.

Hey Parents, Let's Talk About Drugs and Alcohol

Submitted by the Shiawassee Prevention Network

When we talk to parents about their discussions about drugs and alcohol, many of them say that they don't have those types of conversations at home. However, research shows that teens often look to their parents and guardians for information or education about drugs and alcohol.

Teens face a lot of challenges. It's never too early to discuss drugs and alcohol. About 10% of 12-year-olds say they have tried alcohol and by age 15, that percentage jumps to 50%. The sooner you talk to your children and teens about alcohol and other drugs, the greater chance you will have on influencing their decisions about drinking and substance misuse.

It's up to you to have open and honest conversations with your teen about these topics. Here are some tips and tricks to make you confident in talking with your teen about drugs and alcohol:

• Listen, really listen: Give your teen your undivided attention, put your phone away and allow them to freely share their opinions, questions, concerns or feelings.

• Recognize and respond: Seize this opportunity but don't jump or stray

- Recognize and respond: Seize this opportunity but don't jump or stray away from the conversation.
- Keep it casual: Don't know when to bring up drugs or alcohol into conversation? See something on TV or hear something on the radio? Use that as your "in" to start the conversation! Remember these conversations shouldn't be a one-time thing.
- Watch your language: Use open-ended questions to help your teen think more critically. Use scenarios or ask them to share things they have seen or heard.
- Set clear and realistic expectations: Speak directly to the point. Avoid using general statements like "you know what I expect." Be clear in your expectations.
- Show support and offer help: During every conversation with your teen, let them know they can always come to you for information and advice.

You are your teens' biggest influence! Be a role model because even when you think they aren't watching, they are. Do your best to lead by example both inside and outside your home. Share your views on alcohol and drugs with your teens key adults and ask them for help in reinforcing your expectations.

Not talking about alcohol and other drugs still sends children a message. They may not have all the facts but if parents or guardians don't talk about the risks of underage drinking and substance misuse, kids may not see the harm in them.
